The youngest of 11 siblings, Phyllis graduated from Jones Valley High School in Birmingham, Alabama in 1947 and was married to Dewey E. Mayfield on May 21, 1948. She attended special studies at the New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary while Dewey pursued his studies for the ministry there.

She was a devoted homemaker and pastor's wife who also found her own calling in childhood education. She studied early childhood development at Snead College in Boaz, Alabama and served as founder and director of the Childhood Development Center in Springville. She later served as director of Hillsboro Heights Early Child Development Center in Huntsville, and founder and director of Calvary Baptist Childhood Development Center in Dothan, from 1982-1996. Earlier, she worked as a First National Bank teller in the West End Branch in Birmingham, and as head teller of First Alabama Bank in Huntsville.

Phyllis took an active, important role in the Southern Baptist churches in which she and Dewey served — as a Sunday School teacher, as a leader in the Women's Missionary Union (WMU) and Marriage Enrichment Retreats, as past president of Alabama Baptist Mission Director Wives, and a member of the Alabama Baptist Education Commission.

“ She was a sweet woman. I remember her and her husband from Broadmoor Baptist Church many years ago. I never knew we shared the same birthday. She will be missed. So sorry to hear of her passing but I know she is in the hands of GOD.
